learning target

Aim of this section is to learn the relative pronouns and their use in the four cases.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>German</th>
<th>English</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Das ist die Frau, die ich gestern getroffen habe. Er ist der Mann, den wir suchen. Die Arbeit, welche ich jetzt mache, ist schön.</td>
<td>That’s the woman who I met yesterday. He is the man who we are looking for. The job, which I’m doing now, is nice.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

rules

What is a relative pronoun?

A relative pronoun is a word which introduces a relative clause. The relative pronoun refers back to a noun (subject or object) in the main clause. I want us to call this noun in the main clause: Bezugswort (= antecedent).

```
... noun ..., relative pronoun ...
main clause                           relative clause
```

eamples:

Die Frau hat ein großes Auto, das aus Europa kommt. (The woman has a big car which comes from Europe.)

- Auto is the object of the main sentence
- das is the relative pronoun of the relative clause
- das refers back to the car (car is the “Bezugswort”)

Die Frau, die in New York wohnt, hat ein großes Auto. (The woman, who lives in New York, has a big car.)

- Frau is the subject of the main sentence
- die is the relative pronoun of the relative clause
- die refers back to the woman (woman is the “Bezugswort”)

© Thomas Höfler 2005 – 2009
Which relative pronouns do exist in German?

The relative pronouns in German are:

- der: refers back to male nouns
- die: refers back to female nouns
- das: refers back to neuter nouns
- welcher: refers back to male, female or neuter nouns

You can use either der/die/das or welcher.
Both ways are possible although welcher is mostly used in written German.

examples:

- Ich kenne den Mann, der gestern hier war. (I know the man who was here yesterday.)
- Ich kenne den Mann, welcher gestern hier war. (I know the man who was here yesterday.)

If I say der/die/das and welcher are the relative pronouns than it's just half of the truth.
Like many other words you have to modify the pronouns depending on numerus, gender and case (see tables at the end) and now it becomes a bit complicate.

examples:

Ich kenne den Mann, der in Cagayan wohnt. (I know the man who lives in Cagayan.)

- Mann is the "Bezugswort". It's singular and male  ➔ the relative pronoun must be singular and male, too
- He (—>der) plays the role of the subject in the relative clause. He does something (he lives)  ➔ nominative

Ich kenne den Mann, den die Leute hassen. (I know the man who the people hate.)

- Mann is the "Bezugswort". It's singular and male  ➔ the relative pronoun must be singular and male, too
- The people is the subject of the relative clause (they hate). He (—>den) is the direct object of the relative clause. He is being hated.  ➔ accusative
Ich kenne den Mann, dem die Leute ein Buch schenkten. (I know the man to whom the people gave a book.)

- Mann is the "Bezugswort". It's singular and male → the relative pronoun must be singular and male, too
- The people is the subject of the relative clause (they gave). The book is the direct object. He (->dem) is the indirect object of the relative clause. He is the beneficiary. → dative

Ich kenne den Mann, dessen Hund Angie heißt. (I know the man whose dog is called Angie.)

- Mann is the "Bezugswort". It's singular and male → the relative pronoun must be singular and male, too
- He has a dog which is called Angie. The dog belongs to him (possesion / ownership) → genitive

I think the understanding of the cases in relatives clauses is quite tricky and needs practice.
Don't worry we will practise this step by step in the exercises.

Last remarks

In German we don't distinguish between relative pronouns which refer back to alive or dead things like in English.

- who: refers back to alive things
- which / that: refers back to dead things

In this point German is easier than English.

examples:

- Ich kenne das Mädchen, das in Cagayan lebt. (I know the girl who lives in Cagayan.)
- Ich kenne das Haus, das abgebrannt ist. (I know the house which burned down.)

In German it's not possible to leave out the relative pronoun like in English.

examples:

- Das ist der Computer, den ich gestern gekauft habe. (That's the computer which I bought yesterday.)
- Das ist der Computer, ich gestern gekauft habe. (That's the computer I bought yesterday.)

In English both sentences are possible. The second one without the relative pronoun sounds even better. In German, however, only the first one is correct. The second sentence without "den" is wrong and not understandable.

In German the relative clause is always separated by a comma from the main clause. I think that's an advantage compared to English because it makes it easier to understand the two sentences.
example:

- Das ist der Junge, (comma) der bei der Post arbeitet. (That’s the boy (no comma) who works at the post office.)

If there is a preposition which belongs to a verb then the preposition goes at the beginning of the relative clause.

examples:

- Das ist die Frau, auf die gewartet habe. (That the woman who I was waiting for.)
- Sie ist das Mädchen, von dem ich träume. (She is the girl who I dream of.)

In the first sentence the verb is: warten auf (wait for).
In the second sentence the verb is: träumen von (dream of).

tables

decision” of the relative pronouns: der/die/das

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>case</th>
<th>singular</th>
<th>plural</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>male</td>
<td>female</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nominative</td>
<td>der</td>
<td>die</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>genitive</td>
<td>dessen</td>
<td>deren</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dative</td>
<td>dem</td>
<td>der</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accusative</td>
<td>den</td>
<td>die</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The declination scheme of the der/die/das - relative pronouns is almost the same as the as the “declination” of the definite article. I underlined the five pronouns which differ.

“declension” of the relative pronoun: welcher

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>case</th>
<th>singular</th>
<th>plural</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>male</td>
<td>female</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>nominative</td>
<td>welcher</td>
<td>welche</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>genitive</td>
<td>welches</td>
<td>welcher welches welcher</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>dative</td>
<td>welchem</td>
<td>welcher welchem welchen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>accusative</td>
<td>welchen</td>
<td>welche welches welche</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>